Levels of care are based on a point system driven by the number of services an individual resident requires. If a resident has an enhanced need or diagnosis upon admission, they will automatically be charged the enhanced rate. Because care needs change, each resident's needs are continually reevaluated to ensure the proper level of care.

HOW ARE CARE LEVELS CALCULATED?

At High Point, developing an individual care program for each resident is highly personalized, so no standard list of services will apply to each resident or each level of care. The level of assistance each resident requires to support their activities of daily living is the primary factor in determining the overall level of care. For example, here are three examples of daily living activities that a High Point resident may need regular assistance with:

ADMINISTERING MEDICATIONS

Helping a resident keep their prescriptions filled and supervising or administering oral medications to them several times a day will require a lower level of care than a resident who needs help regularly monitoring their blood pressure and blood sugar levels or more frequent assistance administering injectable medications.

PERSONAL ASSISTANCE

A resident who simply needs help washing and setting her hair once a week will not require as high a level of care as a resident who needs daily assistance dressing, bathing, and grooming themselves. The frequency and level of assistance they need are factored into their overall care assessment.

NUTRITION

A resident who simply needs their food cut into more manageable bite-sized pieces requires a much lower level of care than a resident who needs a caregiver to help feed them at every meal to ensure their nutritional needs are being met.
